CONFERENCE THEME

UNCG will be meeting in-person this year on October 26 - 28, 2023, in Charlottesville, Virginia. The UNCG Conference will bring UNCG members and friends together to explore on-the-ground examples of how collaborative governance approaches are being applied in Virginia. We will spend time visiting the sites of some of these projects and engaging in discussions with participants. We anticipate that the examples and our location will also present the opportunity for attendees to engage in lively discussion about how collaborative governance fits in with democratic practices and what challenges it poses.

Attendees will also showcase their own work through Lightning Talks and Concurrent Sessions.

In addition, as an aspect of alternative educational offerings during the conference, there will be behind-the-scenes field trips about collaborative governance initiatives involving the descendants of enslaved laborers at UVA and also at James Madison's Montpelier, among other local offerings for exploration.

6:30pm DINNER AND WELCOME

Opening Remarks: Louis Nelson, Vice Provost for Academic Outreach, University of Virginia

Louis P. Nelson is Professor of Architectural History and the Vice Provost for Academic Outreach. He is a specialist in the built environments of the early modern Atlantic world, with published work on the American South, the Caribbean, and West Africa, and is a leading advocate for the reconstruction of place-based public history.

At UVA and in Charlottesville, this work has taken the form of scholarship that contextualizes the four monuments installed at the height of Jim Crow segregation, walking tours and movies that seek to disseminate a broader understand of how racism is inscribed in the local landscape, a university renaming commission, partnership on a new website for and a narrative interpretation of the new Memorial to Enslaved Laborers, and co-editing both a digital series on UVA and the History of Race and Educated in Tyranny: Slavery at Thomas Jefferson's University. He was also the lead author and co-PI on Race, Place and Equity, a $5M Andrew Mellon Foundation funded grant.

Nelson has also had an impact on public interpretation beyond his hometown. In the summer of 2020, he was awarded funding for "Recovering Erased Histories" another Andrew Mellon grant supporting three team-led and community-engaged field schools to document African American cultural landscapes. He is part of the advisory team for an NEH funded initiative to extensively revise the interpretation of the Hermann-Grima House in New Orleans. He has also argued for the preservation of the damage to the US Capitol building from the January 6 insurrection as an important threshold in the history of American Democracy.

DeTeasa Brown Gathers, Descendants of Enslaved Communities at UVA

The Memorial to Enslaved Laborers (MEL) acknowledges the work and individual lives of the enslaved African Americans who built the University of Virginia and sustained daily life from its founding. The Memorial's construction on the grounds of the University of Virginia marks a critical moment to address the complex history of the University of Virginia—and of the country. The Memorial to Enslaved Laborers responds to a deep need to address a previously unacknowledged history. By creating a physical place of honor to the enslaved, the Memorial is designed to be a place of healing but also a place of learning and an inspiration for action. The Memorial addresses numerous community perspectives on UVA grounds and across Charlottesville, but especially the descendants of African Americans who built, worked, and lived at the University. Over a decade of work led up to the realization of the Memorial. The making of the Memorial was an effort that involved students, faculty, staff, alumni, the design team, and the local community in Charlottesville and Albemarle.

12:00PM LUNCH SPONSORED BY UVA DINE

A UNIQUE UVA-AFRICULTURE-ARAMARK-4P-LOCAL FOOD HUB COLLABORATION: GROWING AN EQUITABLE REGIONAL FOOD SYSTEM WITH INSTITUTIONAL PURCHASING POWER TO SUPPORT BIPOC FARMERS

How might universities use their institutional procurement power to support sustainability goals while also supporting regional food systems and advancing food equity and justice? One answer might be that it is a “very long game” and takes pounds of persistence and patience by many passionate individuals who bring minds, hearts, and organizations together to work for common cause. Another answer is that it can only happen through collaborative governance. Not one step can be made by forcing or pushing. Participants will learn about how the UVA Sustainable Food Collaborative, a form of collaborative governance, has created a larger sphere of collaborative governance with its community business and NGO partners - Aramark/UVA Dine, 4P Foods (a regional sustainable food distributor), Local Food Hub, and Carter Farms & Africulture, and how, with funding from the UVA Sustainability Committee, the collaboration is pushing and stretching the concept of a bottom-line maximizing profit economical food supply chain into a something different – a more value-driven, relation-building proposition that is seeking to address the historical impacts of racism by supporting and working with BIPOC farmers to meet their needs, reduce barriers, and create advantages for participating in the university institutional food supply chain. Still in its very early stages, the initiative is already bearing fruit. Members of the partnership will share the vision and goal, challenges they've encountered, and innovations and strategies to keep the initiative moving forward.

Tanya Denckla Cobb, Chair, UVA Sustainable Food Collaborative and Director, Institute for Engagement & Negotiation at UVA; Michael Carter, Jr., Executive Director, Carter Farms & Africulture; Tom McDougall (or substitute), Founder & CEO, 4P Foods; Stasia Greenewalt, Director, Grower Services, Local Food Hub; Chef James Vetter, Chef, UVA Dine; Matt Rogers, Regional Vice-President, Collegiate Hospitality, Aramark

Tragedy of the Resilience Commons: A Regional Resilience Equity Workgroup - An Experiment in Collaborative Governance for Meaningful Action (Tanya Denckla Cobb, Elizabeth Andrews, Chad Lewis, Claire Keener-Eck)

This panel discussion will highlight the tragedy of the resilience commons: when everybody is responsible for their community's resilience, there's the danger that nobody owns it and therefore it remains unaddressed. This then necessitates a purposive mechanism to help organize community concerns, support community resilience leaders, and help with project implementation to move the needle on resilience. This scenario has played out in numerous ways across the coast, where local governments own the parts of resilience for which only they are solely responsible, such as infrastructure and flooding, which leaves the economic and social elements of resilience for which the entire community is responsible largely unaddressed. The panel will discuss how overcoming the tragedy of the resilience commons is through community-driven, bottom-up collaboration across sectoral boundaries, across the community, and across a region.

Collaborative Governance in China (Kirk Emerson, Lihua Yang, Hong Zhang, Yiran Bai)

This panel presents new Chinese scholarship on collaborative governance (CG) on the ground in China through case study research and in laboratory experiments. Key research questions center on the efficacy of CG in China: How CG can be enacted in an authoritarian regime where trust among stakeholders and with the government is low? How can collaborative capacity be strengthened through collaborative learning? and How can centralized power relations shift or evolve to enable cross-sector participation CG? In this panel, three papers will be presented, leaving ample time for full discussion and reflection not only on the potential for CG in China, but how CG experiences in China inform practice and research in the U.S. and other western countries.

Collaborative Governance in the state of Florida:

Preparing leaders for democratic practice in a climate of uncertainty (Wendy-Lin Bartels, Jonathan Dain, Jocelyn Peskin)

This panel features three presentations from the Florida Natural Resources Leadership Institute (FNRLI). We aim to add to discussions about cultivating and sustaining democratic practice on the heels of a global pandemic, following a national reckoning with racial injustice, with climate-change related weather events ravaging communities, and amidst ongoing political polarization. FNRLI fellows and alumni work in multiple sectors. They remain committed to increasing engagement and inclusiveness in decision-making processes while managing conflict among diverse stakeholder groups. We will share foundational aspects of our FNRLI pedagogy and ponder why these teaching methods are needed now more than ever in the Sunshine State. We will also offer a story of adaptation, discussing how we modified our teaching program to COVID conditions while preserving its underlying foundations. Finally, we will share insights from research with alumni on the key barriers that constrain the practice of collaborative leadership in the field of natural resource management.

Nothing About Us Without Us: Representation & Collaboration on Criminal Sentencing in Washington State (Chris Page, Amanda Murphy)

This session explores collaboration, representation, and other democratic practices—through a 2019-2023 task force (legislatively appointed) to review Washington state's criminal sentencing system and recommend changes to promote public safety, reduce complexities & the resulting errors, and improve effectiveness. This presentation on the Task Force is a follow-up from our UNCG session last year. After the Legislature failed to pass bills based on some early consensus recs (declining trust in democratic institutions, anyone?), the group pushed hard to solve difficult issues...until, discussing the most contentious issues, longstanding power dynamics prevailed to prevent them from achieving consensus.

Navigating Levels of Vulnerability and in the Learning Environment (UNCG Teaching / Training Subcommittee)

Recently, burnout and fatigue have been widespread across industries, and higher education is no exception. High engagement demands, coupled with staff shortages and exhaustion on the part of communities as a whole, have exacerbated the learning environment resulting in various levels of vulnerability. So how do we as trainers and teachers navigate these levels of vulnerability? How can we use the tools and resources of collaborative governance to help ease these challenges, navigate the vulnerability? This facilitated discussion on burnout will seek to answer the following questions: (1) How has burnout and fatigue impacted our work environments? (2) How has burnout changed our approach teaching and training? (3) Internally, how are we navigating burnout in our own teams?

Building Collaboration with Community Leaders to Address Wicked Problems (Bryna Helfer)

During the COVID-19 Pandemic, Arlington County quickly recognized that the lack of trust in Government would potentially be a barrier to helping community members adopt safe practices to limit the spread of the virus; access testing; and willingness to be vaccinated. Arlington County Government quickly formed the Complete Vaccination Committee--modeled after the Census Complete Count Committee, to partner with community leaders who had existing trusted relationships with members of the community, especially communities of color, immigrants, people who do not speak English as their first language and others. This session will highlight the work done during the pandemic, and efforts to continue to maintain and tap community leaders to continue to engage often hard to reach segments of our community.

Collaborative Governance for Health at the Local Level: Partnerships, Process Strategies, and Sustaining Infrastructures (Lisa Blomgren Amsler, Terry Amsler, Lisa-Marie DiNapoli)

In 2020, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation made grants in six states - including Indiana - in partnership with Public Agenda to support public engagement projects through its Community Voices for Health (CVH) program. Presenters will highlight the design, community-engaged research, products, and outcomes of CVH Indiana model project CVH Monroe County (CVHMC). From 2020-2022, CVHMC conducted a city and county engagement scan, interviews with key stakeholders, convened small group discussions elevating the voices of underserved communities (BIPOC and rural community residents), convened deliberative public meetings, worked with the Monroe County Department of Health on engaging more broadly representative groups for health planning, and worked with its Advisory Council. As part of this work, CVHMC developed an open access toolkit and appendices for other communities to use in replicating the model. In 2023, the Advisory Council evolved into a more permanent body named Monroe County Health Equity Council (MCHEC). In 2023, the Partners Council of CVH Indiana is sharing work products and learning statewide with its membership conferences, and through training, links to the Toolkit and Appendices, and workshops.
